Administrative authority continues to be decentralized outside activities between individual faculty members and their departmental heads. "The incumbency upon the Institute to provide continuing leadership in the sense of 'coupling between educational institutions, industry, and government upgrading more innovatively and involved' was inferred."

Concluding remarks: "There are vital issues of academic and administrative policy to be clarified and resolved. They present us with an enormous challenge, and opportunity, for the steps we take now will determine the character of MIT for a long time to come."
