SAMUELS' SPEECH AT WELLESLEY COVERS NATIONAL ECONOMIC PROBLEMS

By Charles Elias

"What Every Housewife Should Know About the Federal Debt" was the major topic discussed by Professor Paul A. Samuelson before a nearly all feminine audience at Alumni Hall, Wellesley College on Tuesday, November 16. On the question of why he picked this topic, Samuelson stated that there could be an urgent political need to educate the housewives. Referring to a recent address by Senator Goldwater before a women's group, he noted that Goldwater said that "any housewife would be more able and capable to chair the Council of Economic Advisers than Walter Heller or any of the other 'liberal economists.'" Therefore, rather than waste time on the unimportant, our millionaire professor decided to go to the grass roots.

Samuelson's address looked into the practical political problem of implementing sound accepted macroeconomic theory into public policy. Basically, alluding to deficits spending, he stated that it was nearly impossible to convince the layman of the validity of the fallacy of composition.

And rather than dwell on any topic, he has decided to "beat them at their own game" with a micro to macro comparison of the most efficient, successful organization in the world, next to the Vatican, American Telephone and Telegraph. The ability of the telephone company to increase its borrowed debt year after year and yet remain the bluest of the blue chips is proof that it is possible for the government to do the same.

Other topics of the evening were, "What Every Young Girl Should Know About the Gold Flow" and "What It Is Like To Be Hundred Over a Million Undergraduates During Finals Period."
