Airline vice president to give Gardner lecture

William Littlewood, vice president of American Airlines, will give the sixth annual Lester D. Gardner Lecture on the History of Aeronautics Thursday at 5:30 p.m. in the Little Theatre.

Mr. Littlewood, who since 1927 has been connected with the development of air transport, will speak on the history of transport aircraft in the U.S. and will also deal with the future and its problems of safety, acceptability, and profit.

The Gardner lecture is presented annually under a bequest by the late Major Lester Gardner, MIT '95, who was an early leader in aviation industry, publisher of aviation journals, and a supporter of education in aeronautical engineering.
