Summer institutes hope to raise level of Negro education

The institute of teachers at predominantly Negro colleges will be held this summer with support from Carnegie Corporation of New York and the Rockefeller Foundation. It was announced last week, Professor Jerald R. Zachariah of the Department of Physics was among those who first supported the institutes.

The institutes are designed to augment faculty members with new developments and training skills in biology, English, history, mathematics and physics. Their purpose is to equip the participating teachers to meet the demands of the graduate improving quality of Negro high school graduates in hopes of breaking into the circle of lower educational opportunities for Negro students.

Prof. Zachariah is a member of the committee formed last October for the organization of the institutes. Meetings were held April 13 and 15 at MIT. Several MIT administrators and faculty members participated.

---

Winners of Boalt Prizes announced; Recognition given for creative work

The winners of the Boalt Prizes for creative work have been announced by the Humanities Department.

James D. Francis Jr. '64 was awarded the first Boalt Prize for imaginative Writing for a short story entitled "The Short, Violent Life of a Member of the Ordering Committee." The second prize was awarded to Peter Cook '64 for an essay entitled "Catch-33: An Analysis."