Dean enters, but confusion persists

by the staff. Meeting on the Saturday of reading period, the staff elected a General Manager, Rob Goeke '65, who had been Advertising Manager for six years and had been Business Manager of one of the many Management Boards, and an Editorial Assistant, a former General Manager of the magazine. Apparently from this air, the masthead previously came a business manager. At this point, the term ended.

Summer of discontent

As the summer began, the General Manager and Managing Editor, Larry Jacobs '65, who had been an Editorial Assistant, wrote in a memorandum indicating that the report had met most of the requirements. Meanwhile, work proceeded on producing the next volume. A faculty and alumni advisory board was formed, and met with representatives of TEN to discuss the disposition of the magazine. Assistance was solicited from other publications in improving the magazine, and work was begun on the first issue in an attempt to produce concrete results to show to Dean Wadleigh. A new managing editor was trained to replace the elected one, who had resigned.

In August, permission was obtained from Dean Wadleigh to recruit freshmen for the magazine, and to publish a first, "probationary" issue. A freshman brochure was printed and sent out, and preparations intensified for the first issue, which will appear in mid-October.

The first issue will contain about 70 pages, making it the largest magazine in several years. It will have many radical changes in style and copy, according to Acting Managing Editor Phillip M. Jacobson '66. It will be almost totally unrecognizable, he thinks because it's better.

Copy for the first issue has now been submitted and is in the printer for the first "probationary" issue. Larry says Jacobs, "We hope," says Editor Meleshimer, "that it won't be the last."

Lawrence Bishoff's correct position

The September 16 issue of The Tech incorrectly stated that Lawrence H. Bishoff '39 had succeeded the late Henry K. Dow as Director of Housing. Mr. Bishoff's correct position is Assistant to the Vice President, Operations and Personnel. He has replaced Jay Martin who had left the Institute over the summer.
