Union states fete

The Research, Development, and Technical Employee Union, one of five unions of MIT workers and students, will host the Victory Banquet and Dance on Friday, Nov. 15 at Monday's on the Circle in Dedham. The affair is to mark the occasion of the recent settlement of the unions with the Institute under a one-year contract.

College World

Give credit where credit is due, that's the motto of students at Oakland College. Or at least, says the Michigan State News, that was their motto when the Delta Upsilon bell disappeared.

Delta Upsilon, one of MSU's fraternities, owns a bell which is rung at football games when the Spartans score. A few years ago, however, it was stolen.

Delta Upsilon received a letter from a woman who said that Northwestern students had taken the bell, and that it would be returned after MSU's home-coming game. This apparently upset the Oakland College people; however, they had posed as high school students from East Lan-ge, pretending that they wanted the bell for their homing ceremonies. By the time someone checked with East Lan-g Ting High, the bell was gone.

The Oakland people had wanted to use the bell for a birthday party, Whose it could not be determined by the News.

State of Massachusetts

Some people continue schools, as has been shown. But few can equal the confusion of a graduate student in the University of Min-nesota. For the first time, reports the Oregon Daily Journal, the student's name has been changed. Many of the residents are foreign students, and since there was a period where housing assign-ments were unclear, one was moved into a new room. When they did, chances were the student's name was changed.

Oakland College demands credit for heisting Delta Upsilon's bell

A Michigan State senior girl was at the correct school, but when she decided that the room she had rented wasn't right, she had problems. The girl, Sandra Feldman, had agreed to rent a room advertised in the college housing office. She had then paid the landlord a week's rent in advance ($35), and the two decided to rent a different room, and went back to the landlord to collect the balance. She was refused.
