The spirit of Christmas comes under much discussion these days; there are some who feel it proper to point out all the hypocrisy and humanistic con-

* * *

The predominant virtue of Christmas is hope—hope in a divine providence, or at least the possibility of bettering the situation at an outstanding scientific institution.

The Administration recognizes the value of such hope, and in the spirit of this year, the Christmas Convocation will be highlighted by Dean Emeritus Harri-

The predominant virtue of Christmas is hope—hope in a divine providence, or at least the possibility of bettering the situation at an outstanding scientific institution.

The Administration recognizes the value of such hope, and in the spirit of this year, the Christmas Convocation will be highlighted by Dean Emeritus Harri-

...and in the spirit of this year, the Christmas Convocation will be highlighted by Dean Emeritus Harri-

The predominant virtue of Christmas is hope—hope in a divine providence, or at least the possibility of bettering the situation at an outstanding scientific institution.

The Administration recognizes the value of such hope, and in the spirit of this year, the Christmas Convocation will be highlighted by Dean Emeritus Harri-

The predominant virtue of Christmas is hope—hope in a divine providence, or at least the possibility of bettering the situation at an outstanding scientific institution.

The Administration recognizes the value of such hope, and in the spirit of this year, the Christmas Convocation will be highlighted by Dean Emeritus Harri-

The predominant virtue of Christmas is hope—hope in a divine providence, or at least the possibility of bettering the situation at an outstanding scientific institution.

The Administration recognizes the value of such hope, and in the spirit of this year, the Christmas Convocation will be highlighted by Dean Emeritus Harri-

The predominant virtue of Christmas is hope—hope in a divine providence, or at least the possibility of bettering the situation at an outstanding scientific institution.

The Administration recognizes the value of such hope, and in the spirit of this year, the Christmas Convocation will be highlighted by Dean Emeritus Harri-