Johnson to leave Sloan School

By Daniel Asimov

Dean Howard W. Johnson of the Alfred P. Sloan MIT, recently announced that he is leaving this post to become an executive vice president of the manufacturing and transportation division of General Motors Corporation. A native of Newtonville, Massachusetts, Johnson has been at MIT for ten years, and has served as the school's dean since 1953. He is succeeded by Dr. John P. Deutch, who has been on the faculty since 1946.

Johnson's tenure as dean was marked by a number of significant achievements. Under his leadership, the Sloan School of Management grew in size and prestige, becoming one of the leading institutions for business education and research in the United States. Johnson also played a key role in the development of the MIT Sloan Management Review, a leading publication in the field of management studies.

In addition to his academic contributions, Johnson was a vocal advocate for social and political issues. He was a strong supporter of civil rights, and spoke out against the Vietnam War. He also played a key role in the development of the Sloan Center for Science, Technology, and Public Policy, which focuses on the role of science and technology in society.

Throughout his career, Johnson was known for his commitment to excellence in education and research. He will be greatly missed by the MIT community and by students and scholars around the world.
