The Theatre Company offers discounts...

The Theatre Company of Boston presents its first concert, which will offer discounts to theatre parties of 15 or more. The sound and stage settings are the same; tickets range from $2.50 on the $2.25 seats and $2.00 on the $2.10 seats. The prices are slightly higher for larger groups. Information on reservations and party dates can be obtained by contacting Charles Cohn at the Theatre Company of Boston, 200 Tremont Street, Boston, MA 02116.

The New York Camerata, in a concert sponsored by the Humanities Department Monday, November 1, demonstrated to an audience of 150 or more, the wide scope of the New York Camerata. The New Student Center's Mezzanine Lounge was converted into a chamber music setting by the placement of the band on stage for the concert. The varied repertoire included works by Jacques Ibert, Giannini, Schuller, and Schonberg. It had the eerie yet unobtrusive sound of a string quartet, with the additional element of a trombone, trumpet and French horn added with the result that the sounds were sometimes difficult to locate. The contrast betweenenterprises and movements created a kind of music which made the piece end all too soon.

The New York Camerata, in a concert sponsored by the Humanities Department Monday, November 1, demonstrated to an audience of 150 or more, the wide scope of the New York Camerata. The New Student Center's Mezzanine Lounge was converted into a chamber music setting by the placement of the band on stage for the concert. The varied repertoire included works by Jacques Ibert, Giannini, Schuller, and Schonberg. It had the eerie yet unobtrusive sound of a string quartet, with the additional element of a trombone, trumpet and French horn added with the result that the sounds were sometimes difficult to locate. The contrast betweenenterprises and movements created a kind of music which made the piece end all too soon.

The New York Camerata, in a concert sponsored by the Humanities Department Monday, November 1, demonstrated to an audience of 150 or more, the wide scope of the New York Camerata. The New Student Center's Mezzanine Lounge was converted into a chamber music setting by the placement of the band on stage for the concert. The varied repertoire included works by Jacques Ibert, Giannini, Schuller, and Schonberg. It had the eerie yet unobtrusive sound of a string quartet, with the additional element of a trombone, trumpet and French horn added with the result that the sounds were sometimes difficult to locate. The contrast betweenenterprises and movements created a kind of music which made the piece end all too soon.