The second graven problem confronting college students today is inferiority feelings. (The first graven problem is, of course, the one in the rear end, it sort of makesPopularity, the academic equivalent of scenery.) Let us take a look into the causes of inferiority feelings and their possible cures.

Psychologists divide inferiority feelings into three principal categories:

1. Social inferiority.
2. Mental inferiority.
3. Financial inferiority.

Eros has a fourth category: Ichthyological inferiority—a feeling that other people have prettier fish—but I'm sure you know that common only along the coast and in the Great Lakes area.

Let us start with the feeling of physical inferiority, perhaps the one we understand. Naturally we are all inclined to feel inferior to the burly football captain or the beautiful homecoming queen. But we should not look at all the people, neither braver nor beautiful, who have made their mark in life. Look at Socrates. Look at Caesar. Look at Lincoln.

What I mean is you can't always tell what's inside a pound of sugar. At the college, (Somewhere in the common only along the coasts and in the Great Lakes area.)

Let us start with the feeling of physical inferiority, perhaps the one we understand. Naturally we are all inclined to feel inferior to the burly football captain or the beautiful homecoming queen. But we should not look at all the people, neither braver nor beautiful, who have made their mark in life. Look at Socrates. Look at Caesar. Look at Lincoln.

What I mean is you can't always tell what's inside a pound of sugar. At the college, (Somewhere in the common only along the coasts and in the Great Lakes area.)

Let us start with the feeling of physical inferiority, perhaps the one we understand. Naturally we are all inclined to feel inferior to the burly football captain or the beautiful homecoming queen. But we should not look at all the people, neither braver nor beautiful, who have made their mark in life. Look at Socrates. Look at Caesar. Look at Lincoln.

What I mean is you can't always tell what's inside a pound of sugar. At the college, (Somewhere in the common only along the coasts and in the Great Lakes area.)

Let us start with the feeling of physical inferiority, perhaps the one we understand. Naturally we are all inclined to feel inferior to the burly football captain or the beautiful homecoming queen. But we should not look at all the people, neither braver nor beautiful, who have made their mark in life. Look at Socrates. Look at Caesar. Look at Lincoln.

What I mean is you can't always tell what's inside a pound of sugar. At the college, (Somewhere in the common only along the coasts and in the Great Lakes area.)

Let us start with the feeling of physical inferiority, perhaps the one we understand. Naturally we are all inclined to feel inferior to the burly football captain or the beautiful homecoming queen. But we should not look at all the people, neither braver nor beautiful, who have made their mark in life. Look at Socrates. Look at Caesar. Look at Lincoln.

What I mean is you can't always tell what's inside a pound of sugar. At the college, (Somewhere in the common only along the coasts and in the Great Lakes area.)

Let us start with the feeling of physical inferiority, perhaps the one we understand. Naturally we are all inclined to feel inferior to the burly football captain or the beautiful homecoming queen. But we should not look at all the people, neither braver nor beautiful, who have made their mark in life. Look at Socrates. Look at Caesar. Look at Lincoln.

What I mean is you can't always tell what's inside a pound of sugar. At the college, (Somewhere in the common only along the coasts and in the Great Lakes area.)

Let us start with the feeling of physical inferiority, perhaps the one we understand. Naturally we are all inclined to feel inferior to the burly football captain or the beautiful homecoming queen. But we should not look at all the people, neither braver nor beautiful, who have made their mark in life. Look at Socrates. Look at Caesar. Look at Lincoln.

What I mean is you can't always tell what's inside a pound of sugar. At the college, (Somewhere in the common only along the coasts and in the Great Lakes area.)

Let us start with the feeling of physical inferiority, perhaps the one we understand. Naturally we are all inclined to feel inferior to the burly football captain or the beautiful homecoming queen. But we should not look at all the people, neither braver nor beautiful, who have made their mark in life. Look at Socrates. Look at Caesar. Look at Lincoln.

What I mean is you can't always tell what's inside a pound of sugar. At the college, (Somewhere in the common only along the coasts and in the Great Lakes area.)

Let us start with the feeling of physical inferiority, perhaps the one we understand. Naturally we are all inclined to feel inferior to the burly football captain or the beautiful homecoming queen. But we should not look at all the people, neither braver nor beautiful, who have made their mark in life. Look at Socrates. Look at Caesar. Look at Lincoln.

What I mean is you can't always tell what's inside a pound of sugar. At the college, (Somewhere in the common only along the coasts and in the Great Lakes area.)

Let us start with the feeling of physical inferiority, perhaps the one we understand. Naturally we are all inclined to feel inferior to the burly football captain or the beautiful homecoming queen. But we should not look at all the people, neither braver nor beautiful, who have made their mark in life. Look at Socrates. Look at Caesar. Look at Lincoln.

What I mean is you can't always tell what's inside a pound of sugar. At the college, (Somewhere in the common only along the coasts and in the Great Lakes area.)

Let us start with the feeling of physical inferiority, perhaps the one we understand. Naturally we are all inclined to feel inferior to the burly football captain or the beautiful homecoming queen. But we should not look at all the people, neither braver nor beautiful, who have made their mark in life. Look at Socrates. Look at Caesar. Look at Lincoln.

What I mean is you can't always tell what's inside a pound of sugar. At the college, (Somewhere in the common only along the coasts and in the Great Lakes area.)

Let us start with the feeling of physical inferiority, perhaps the one we understand. Naturally we are all inclined to feel inferior to the burly football captain or the beautiful homecoming queen. But we should not look at all the people, neither braver nor beautiful, who have made their mark in life. Look at Socrates. Look at Caesar. Look at Lincoln.

What I mean is you can't always tell what's inside a pound of sugar. At the college, (Somewhere in the common only along the coasts and in the Great Lakes area.)

Let us start with the feeling of physical inferiority, perhaps the one we understand. Naturally we are all inclined to feel inferior to the burly football captain or the beautiful homecoming queen. But we should not look at all the people, neither braver nor beautiful, who have made their mark in life. Look at Socrates. Look at Caesar. Look at Lincoln.

What I mean is you can't always tell what's inside a pound of sugar. At the college, (Somewhere in the common only along the coasts and in the Great Lakes area.)

Let us start with the feeling of physical inferiority, perhaps the one we understand. Naturally we are all inclined to feel inferior to the burly football captain or the beautiful homecoming queen. But we should not look at all the people, neither braver nor beautiful, who have made their mark in life. Look at Socrates. Look at Caesar. Look at Lincoln.

What I mean is you can't always tell what's inside a pound of sugar. At the college, (Somewhere in the common only along the coasts and in the Great Lakes area.)

Let us start with the feeling of physical inferiority, perhaps the one we understand. Naturally we are all inclined to feel inferior to the burly football captain or the beautiful homecoming queen. But we should not look at all the people, neither braver nor beautiful, who have made their mark in life. Look at Socrates. Look at Caesar. Look at Lincoln.

What I mean is you can't always tell what's inside a pound of sugar. At the college, (Somewhere in the common only along the coasts and in the Great Lakes area.)

Let us start with the feeling of physical inferiority, perhaps the one we understand. Naturally we are all inclined to feel inferior to the burly football captain or the beautiful homecoming queen. But we should not look at all the people, neither braver nor beautiful, who have made their mark in life. Look at Socrates. Look at Caesar. Look at Lincoln.

What I mean is you can't always tell what's inside a pound of sugar. At the college, (Somewhere in the common only along the coasts and in the Great Lakes area.)

Let us start with the feeling of physical inferiority, perhaps the one we understand. Naturally we are all inclined to feel inferior to the burly football captain or the beautiful homecoming queen. But we should not look at all the people, neither braver nor beautiful, who have made their mark in life. Look at Socrates. Look at Caesar. Look at Lincoln.

What I mean is you can't always tell what's inside a pound of sugar. At the college, (Somewhere in the common only along the coasts and in the Great Lakes area.)

Let us start with the feeling of physical inferiority, perhaps the one we understand. Naturally we are all inclined to feel inferior to the burly football captain or the beautiful homecoming queen. But we should not look at all the people, neither braver nor beautiful, who have made their mark in life. Look at Socrates. Look at Caesar. Look at Lincoln.