Bullying

The Daily arranged two bull sessions in order to sample student views. One involved only men, the other only women. The comments covered dating, etiquette, and, of course, sex. Although the men agreed physical appearance is important as an initial attraction, one said, “A girl that’s not enough to go in a clothes horse. She looks a lot better if she metals in what she’s wearing.” One dismissed excessive makeup and clothes with the comment, “You don’t get any more on a good steak, but maybe a ham-let meatloaf." The most differentiating factor among coeds, the man agreed, in age. Freshman girls think all men are nasty,” one engineering student said. “Sophomores girls think some are, juniors know they all are, and the seniors are glad.” Freshmen aren’t too concerned with technique; they let their emotions run away with them. But they worry because they aren’t aware that girls like sex, too. these and more profound remarks appeared in the paper’s coverage of the recent discussions of ‘in love parents” literally ‘in place of parents” with regard to the University. “It’s been much shared," the dean said; "roughly translated the phrase means ‘we help you’ rather than ‘that damn abused,” the dean said; "roughly
