Two recent British imports have added greatly to the literature of the film noir. Both "It's My Life!" by the Animals and "A Well Respected Man" by the Kinks could make it on their best-ali list; however, the words of both are so interesting that one listener must sing the song by not taking the efforts to decipher them.

"It's My Life," which features a catchy minor-mode guitar part and the smooth Negro-blues vocal style of the Animals, was written by Roger Atkins and Carl D'Amico. Atkins has been quite pro-
