By Jim Yamashita

The Boston Bruins finished their season in good form, placing third in the New England Division. After a disappointing regular season, the Beantown's 3-4 victory over the Binghamton Flyers in the opening round of the playoffs was a sign of things to come. The team made the most of its chances in the series, winning the first two games decisively to take the best-of-five set 2-0.

The Bruins then faced the New York Ranger in the semifinals, where they lost the first game. However, they bounced back to win the next two games, securing a spot in the championship round. In the final series, the Bruins made the most of their opportunities, winning all three games to win the championship.

Will Gardner was the only Tech undergraduate on the Bruins lineup. In the first game, he made 1-1, and the team won 4-3. In the second game, Gardner was the hero of the series, scoring the tying goal in the third period, the winning goal in overtime, and the series-clinching goal in the second overtime period. The Bruins' victory in the final game over the Canadiens was a hard fought one, with the Bruins winning 3-2 in overtime.

The Bruins' success was due in large part to their strong defense, which held the Canadiens to just six goals in the series. The Bruins' offense, led by Gardner's three goals, scored 12 goals in the series, including two in the final game.

The Bruins' championship win was a welcome end to a long season for the team, which had to battle through many difficulties during the regular season to make it to the playoffs. The team has high hopes for the future, and it will be interesting to see how they perform in the coming season.