Lightweight aircraft competition scheduled for Armory Saturday

Tech Model Aircrafters will be hosting a contest for lightweight endurance model aircraft in the Armory on Saturday from 12 to 8:30 pm. Competitors are expected to come from the entire New England area to compete for prizes, and an attendance of about forty people is expected. Three events in two age groups will be flown, with maximum time aloft determining the winners.

The lightest of these aircraft should be capable of staying aloft more than fifty minutes using tightly wound rubber bands for power. The Armory, with a ceiling height of 45 feet, is one of the few sites in New England where these planes can reach their full potential.

The contest is sponsored by the Tech Model Aircrafters and the Academy of Model Aeronautics, with prizes being contributed by the TSA and hobby manufacturers and dealers around New England.

Viewers will find that 'Darling' is a very old story. Diana Scott, played by Julie Christie, can't make up her mind. She drifts from man to man, she feels something is missing in each love affair. The audience soon finds out what is missing. Darling Diana Scott is incapable of any real feeling or love for anyone but herself.

Yet, Diana, in spite of her calculating mind, her lack of sincerity, and her wastrel, is irresistible. Darling, as Diana is called, has her way with everyone. Children adore her. She enjoys her vitality and her beauty. This is the crux of any such story about a beautiful but wanton woman. The audience is led to believe that a beautiful and charming woman who loves children can't be all bad.

So that the audience won't go away with the vague feeling that they had seen the movie before, Darling lives in a jester's coat. It is as a model that Darling meets her loves. Each time she sees an opportunity, a new advancement for herself. By the end of the movie Darling has established herself as the wife of a very rich Dublin nobleman. The catch is, of course, that Darling could never find what she had searched for, true feelings.

The setting in 'Darling' surpasses the quality of the script. Julie Christie's performance won her the Academy Award for Best Actress this year. In the libretto of 'Darling' are many moods from stately to sentimental that the role called for. Miss Christie played it very convincingly.
