Note to future generation buried with time capsule

"This time capsule has been placed beneath the Big Hall (La Grande Violon), a steel sculpture by Alexander Calder; to leave for posterity a few things representative of our culture and particularity of science.

"We promise that the science, technology and human relations of your time will be far more advanced than ours. We hope, however, that you will remember and value our contributions to the advancement of mankind as we now remember and value those of the people who have lived before us."
