Olivier and Heston featured together

By John Brookes

"Khartoum," in another attempt at the production of an epic film, following the footsteps of such greats as "The Ten Commandments" and "Ben Hur," portrays the Holy war. Its plot centers on the Islamic holy war started in the Italian in the 19th century under the leadership of a self-appointed Muslim prophet, the Mahdi. It is a historical romance and a rousing adventure story. The acting is first rate, the direction is excellent. The casting is varied considerably by application of different types of roles and the acting is all top notch. The performance is entertaining and will satisfy the appetite of fans of historical drama and adventure stories.

The brilliant acting of two already well-known men, Charlton Heston, as General Gordon, and Laurence Olivier, as Ben Hur, is one of the leaders of the film. Heston portrays a man deeply motivated by religious and political ideals, while Olivier reproduces in a very realistic manner the character of Ben Hur. Although the plot is relatively simple, it is intrinsically complicated by the back at home political intrigue of the British government, which supposedly supported General Gordon.

Enjoyable photography. Color aerial shots of the country and vivid closeups of the battle action, combined with the special effect of the Cinerama technique, produce an epic movie spectacle.

Are you discontented even enough to work for G.E.?

Does water pollution bug you? Or smog? Does it concern you that some places in the country never have enough teachers? Or nurses? And when you read about the growing pains of a developing nation, do you wish you could do something?

You can. Thousands of General Electric people are helping to solve the problems of a growing, changing world.

Students and specialists to play harmonium, as well as intense periods of concentration it keeps the audience alert. Although no innovations are introduced, and the plot is one that has been seen before, the movie is definitely enjoyable.
