Highly-paid professional

Brooke proposes career army

This highly-trained, professional force would be somewhat smaller than our present force but be effective due to its higher degree of training and the US's reduced need for military forces when the Vietnam conflict is brought to a close. Although the proposal would cost approximately $3 billion more than our present military establishment, Mr. Brooke feels that the cost would be worth it.

A professional military force, he maintained, would eliminate the uncertainties and inequities of selective service and would allow allocation of the nation's manpower based on the degree to which one would be a lottery system. Furthermore, he said, universal military training is unnecessary and the proposed two-year service with the goal of having the choice of serving in the Army or some sort of public service would take the uncertainties and inequities out of accommodating every young person in the country and would therefore be superior.

On other domestic issues, Mr. Brooke stressed the need to make it more profitable for a person to work than seek relief while at the same time maintaining a decent level of living for the poor, perhaps through a negative income tax. He also expressed his approval of the attempt to repeal section 141 of the Taft-Hartley law and said that he did not think any new anti-strike legislation necessary.

On the problem of Red China, Mr. Brooke indicated that he did not view war with China as "impossible," and that he felt that eventually we will be able to come to terms with the Chinese. He feels that we should attempt to understand the Chinese and learn as much about them as possible in order to understand their motives and actions.

When asked how he would bring the Vietnam conflict to a close through negotiations, Mr. Brooke indicated that the principal aims of negotiations, in his view, should be to gain unilateral de-escalation, the removal of all American and North Vietnamese troops from South Viet Nam, and the cessation of the bombing of North Viet Nam.

This is your chance, Student #7026941. Drink Sprite and be somebody.

MR BIG

Take heart. Take a dive. Then take a battle of Sprite from the nearest pop machine. Suddenly it's in your hand. Cold. Bitter. Tart and tingling. You tackle friendship and rub your hands together. (You should, they're probably chilled to the bone by now.)

You tear off to a corner, alone, within cartridge of your fellows.

And then? And then? And then you unleash it. SPRITE! It fizizes! It roars! It bubbles with glee, energy and spirit.

Heads turn. whisperings. "Who's that strangely fascinating student with the arch smile and what's in that curious green bottle that's making such a racket, anyway?"

And you've arrived! The distinctive taste and brilliant character of Sprite has set you apart. You're somebody...uh...uh, whoever-you-are.

SPRITE, SO TART AND THINGING, WE JUST COULDN'T KEEP IT QUIET.
