The pomp and ceremony of President Howard Westerley Johnson's Inauguration are indicative of many normally blasé MIT students.

The typical MIT reaction to anything smacking of ceremony is often one of quiet detest, but Saturday's ceremony served to remind its viewers of the serious side of the Institute and its purpose.

That we chose to inaugurate our President in such a regal manner testifies to the fact that we are indeed conscious of the social significance of science and technology. Perhaps many Tech students have, so to speak, already placed, a ceremony that so colorful and dignified, so heavy-scented with history, so served to remind its viewers of the seriousness, so heavy-scented with history, so
