of coordinating these changes with the Heads of the five schools and with the Treasurer and Comptroller.
The annual budget of MIT, excluding the Lincoln Laboratories and the Instrumentation Laboratories, is about $55,000,000.

Provides support

Generally speaking, Mr. Kispert is ready to provide any necessary administrative support in establishing and implementing Institute policy. To keep in touch with the heads of the departments responsible to him, Mr. Kispert typically meets informally with each several times monthly.

Programs in the areas of Mechanical Engineering, Electronic Engineering, and Aeronaautical Engineering. He was an Aviation Engineering Officer in the Pacific Ocean area for the Navy during World War II.

Served 4 presidents

President Karl Taylor Compton of MIT appointed Mr. Kispert his personal assistant in 1946. Six years later he became Executive Assistant to President James R.
Kimball, Jr. Since 1961 he has served as Vice President, Academic Administration.

Between 1956 and 1961 Mr. Kispert served as Assistant Chancel-ellor and then as Administrative Vice Chancellor. The Chancellor (the office no longer exists at MIT) was the senior academic officer of the Institute. His functions have largely been taken over by the Provost.

Affiliated with other schools

Mr. Kispert is a trustee of the Hampton Institute, Hampton, Virginia, one of the leading Negro colleges in the US. He is also Vice-Chairman of the Dana Hill School, a private girls' secondary school in Wellesley, Mass., where he currently has two daughters enrolled. He has a son, Robert, who is a junior at MIT. Mr. Kispert is Vice President and Director of the Harvard Cooperative Savings and a Director of the Cambridge Trust Company.

Would you like to learn to fly an airplane? Three of the girls targeted above are part of a P.
Ballantine & Sons sponsored contest to find MIT's Ale Man of the Year.

These girls (in order, Ann Vioz, Priscilla Clark, and Jeannette Srivaths) will nominate three students whose names will be placed before the student body for balloting. The man who receives the most votes will be officially denisnated MIT's Ale Man of the Year.

Along with this distinction, the company will pay $200 for the writing of a short story about the winner of the choice.

Drinking is not a prerequisite for consideration, the men will be chosen on the basis of intelligence, personality, athletic abilities, and appearance. In short, a male Miss Rheingold.
