average his freshman year (not the Admissions Office feels there is anything special about 3.2, but that this figure results cm a more easily handled graph.) The data used for this analysis includes grades, college board scores, and subjects taken.

Selection of co-eds

Selection of co-eds is based on the same procedure, but due to housing considerations, they cannot be evaluated with other applicants. Also, it is felt that co-eds have a greater adjustment to make, since few of them are used to having so many boys around. Consequently, the personal evaluation takes on greater importance to determine how well the applicant might adjust to MIT.

A slightly different manner of selection has to be used for foreign students, because foreign schools do not send quite the same type information as do American and Canadian schools.
