MIT has always prided itself on its ability to remain among the nation's leading technological innovators, but outsiders are frequently shocked to learn that MIT still teaches classes by the outmoded method of having faculty members stand in front of small groups of Information on portions of the wall with chalk. They are even more shocked when they observe students actually interpreting the professor's smooth flow of presentation by breaking in and asking questions. Clearly, in this day and age of video-taped lectures, monitor facing lecture halls, and pre-programmed learning, the Institute lags far behind such educational leaders as the University of Toronto, Boston University, and Parsons College. With two video tape machines, 100 TV monitors, and a few rehearsals, thirty assistant professors could teach all the courses in the Institute. Thus freeing the faculty for research, seminars and squads. If it ever happens here, we hope the students start a rating system -- by turning off the sets. What's your Neilson, Prof?

I-A. Announcement of a 24th course of study, Ornithology, is due shortly. The main problem holding the program back was a distinct lack of space. However, when the ex-Military Science department was called to Vietnam, the new department allowed to move into Building 20. Before being shipped off, Colonel [Mrs.], Lutz remarked, "We don't care, the place is for the birds anyway."

68. Rumor that Beaver Key would finally elect new members has proved entirely false. The current members have decided to make their organization a purely graduate bureau-ary, thus no member of the class of '68 will be allowed to until after they have graduated. In addition to Field Day, the Key has decided to run the state of Arkansas.

79. Until the housing situation is eased by the completion of the new McGregor dorm, the Institute has decided to set up pup tents on Briggs field. These canvas top doniciles will feature running water, heat, and compulsory common picnics. The major advantage of the new system is the liberal parapets. Female students will be allowed to test until 1:00 am.

69. In an attempt to upgrade the educational standards of a small liberal arts school up the river, MIT will shift some of its students to the Harvard Square Area. The impoverished, unurtured liberal arts school will reciprocate. The moving of MIT students will be based on the score they achieved on their 8.01 final, starting from the bottom, except for discipline and rep-isolation card burners, who will go first. All students ordered to move will have 30 days in which to file an appeal with their advisors.

Psychologists say that you study better on an Empty Stomach

Do you really believe that?

Food to go at Twenty Chimneys

Scuba Diving Classes
Seven Days a Week.
All Equipment Supplied.
Avenue 2-5818