Two important proposals will be put before the Student Committee for Academic Performance, he noted, but it can be seen within the student’s major field. The ultimate goal, he continued, would be to have students take courses that they feel they might not do as well in, but that will be beneficial to them. If approved, the program would allow certain students to enter second-semester extension courses from its proposed maximum of 24 out of 30 units.

Second-semester extension

The second proposal, sponsored by the Student Committee on Educational Policy and the Committee for Academic Performance, would extend the reading period from three days to one week during the second semester of this year. Then the CEP would consider data from being set up in the style day period and next term’s one-week period to determine how effectively an extension would be used.

Kindelbarger said he was impressed by the interest of the students and the work of CEP in bringing the new proposals to their present state.
