which he is presently the Acting Dean. In this capacity he is responsible for the seven academic departments of biology, chemistry, geology and geophysics, mathematics, meteorology, nutrition and food science, and physics. Besides his office, the Provost is also a freshman adviser for six students, who are reported to be doing "well." He is a member of the Watsontown School Committee, and likes to sail and fish. He is currently writing articles on disarmament for the Saturday Review and the Associated Press.

A native of Detroit, Dr. Wiesner received his BS, MS and PhD degrees at the University of Michigan in 1937, 1938 and 1940 respectively.

During the Second World War, he joined the staff of MIT's Radiation Laboratory as associate leader of the radar frequency development group. Later he became project engineer of a key radio development program and a member of the lab's steering committee.

In 1946, Dr. Wiesner joined the Los Alamos Laboratory staff for a year, returning to MIT to eventually become a full Professor of electrical engineering in 1950. He became director of the Research Laboratory of Electronics (RLE) in 1952.

Contributions to science Dr. Wiesner's scientific contributions, particularly in the fields of microwave theory and the communications sciences, have been noteworthy. He was one of the principals in the conception of satellite transmission and in the application of statistical methods to communications engineering. He has participated in several winter studies of great importance to the national defense, as well as in a number of international conferences devoted to the subject of disarmament. He was chairman of the Institute's steering committee for a Center for Communication Sciences established in 1958.

Tech Show '67 to tour abroad
The renowned conflict on foreign shores recently resulted in the drafting of the cast of "Lucy Williams." Tech Show '67. The talented and well-entrenched throngs have been called upon by the Minister of Defense and Finance, Hoyt Rye, to entertain the troops of Malamando for two months.

One of the many reasons for this choice was Karl Dampf (Lucy Williams) a graduate student in Physics who rose to fame in G&G's production of "The Conquerors," with his portrayal of Max, Bertoni, '70, a member of Drama Shop, R. Price Rudy '71, President of G&G and Bob Rahn '69 also of G&G are all nominees for Tony awards this year. Alan Cacovsky '61 and Jim Sciano '79 are making their MIT debut and it is believed that their talent displayed in auditions is the reason for their recent draft notice.

Ruby Brown, convert of Tech Show '66, and Mary Goodman, both of BU, along with scores of fellow female entertainers are expected to raise morale aboard to new heights. The triumphant troop returns on Friday the third of March to thrill the Tech crowd with their theatrical talents.
