Thieves in the night

The fate met by the architecture students’ fourth floor exhibit spotlights a particularly unkind break - off with other people’s property. The Course IV exhibit was sponsored and paid for by the students themselves. The pictures were arranged with examples of some excellent photography, and each photo belonged to an individual. Nevertheless, a person or persons desecrated these works of art - need; hence they stole the pictures, not once, but twice. There is little left of the exhibit. Those who would like to see it (it had been announced in the Calendar of Events) are cheated out of seeing so. The students whose photos were taken suffer a financial loss and a personal aggravation.

Were this an isolated incident it might be excused, but it is not. Dr. Edgerton’s photo attraction are regularly, though not frequently, the victims of thieves. Once a six foot aerial photo of Boston was removed. Other examples in other departments abound.

A fairly open place; even in the late hours students, faculty, and researchers are left free to roam. There are always a few souls burning the midnight oil and these few are no longer needed to be made available at all times in many cases. It is usually impossible to lock up exhibits for the evening, nor does it seem wise to ask the students to lock back up the Institute.

The nature of those things stolen indicates that their financial value, though often extensive, is not of a form attractive to professional thieves. In most cases it is the work of the over-eager souvenir collector who cannot recognize the difference between a genuine souvenir and someone else’s property. There need be no euphemism for this activity — it is stealing, clear and simple. Someone suffers whether it be the owner or those proved of the public availability of the object.

Another type of thievery is often termed “borrowing.” This occurs most often at the libraries when students do not sign out books, but walk off with them, for a term, perhaps, forever. One of the latest events of interest for someone with designs on the Encyclopedia Britannica, they are helpless against those who remove the reprints from their binders. This problem exists in the Student Center library where the reprints are open to all, and it appears patently absurd why anyone would want to steal from a library which is open 24 hours of every day. Perhaps it represents an unquenchable desire to save on book, or perhaps the average low by preventing others from doing the assigned readings.

We can only point out the obvious that all this is stealing, that it is illegal and punishable. The answer does not lie in greater security measures; it merely requires a little conscionous thought and moral restraint on those who indulge.

Letters to the Tech

Ch eer jeer

To the Editor:

I realize that what I say will disturb some people, but I have to say it. I find that my opinion is shared by some of the students.

We are the future, and we are the trendsetters. We are the trendsetters of the MIT, and we are the trendsetters of the world.

Unlike some of our peers, we do not follow the crowd. We are the trendsetters. We are the trendsetters of the world.

Ch eer jeer

To the Editor:

I am a cheerleader for the cheerleading team. Our team is known for its high energy and enthusiastic performances. We always try our best to give our fans a show they will never forget.

This past weekend, we had the opportunity to perform at a local event. The weather was perfect, and the crowd was enthusiastic. We put on our best performance, and we could see the excitement on their faces. It was a great feeling to know that we had made a difference in their day.

Cheer leading is not just about dancing; it is about inspiring others and lifting their spirits. We are a team, and we always support each other, no matter what. We are known for our loyalty and dedication.

Thank you for allowing us to share our passion and energy with you.

Sincerely,

[Your Name]

College World

Ed Chalmers

Four women’s dormitory presid- ents resigned at Carleton College because of protest over an action taken by the Northfield, Minnesota, Student Union. The action in question was WL’s refusal to re-enroll its present role as en-从而增加学院的影响力。此外，还对宿舍的使用规则进行了审查，以确保它们适用于各种学生群体。女性学生应该被允许进入学院，并受到尊重。

The University of Michigan’s student newspaper, The Michigan Daily, may go on strike to protest the university’s administra- tion. Last week the Board of Student Publications rejected the appointment of Roger Rapaport as editor-in-chief of the Daily. The Board claimed that Rapaport was not qualified for the position and this decision seemed to be in violation of the contract between the Board and the Daily. The Board’s decision led to a strike by the Daily’s student editors and the newspaper has been suspended while the dispute continues.

Wellness protest

The University of Michigan’s student newspaper, The Michigan Daily, may go on strike to protest the university’s administra- tion. Last week the Board of Student Publications rejected the appointment of Roger Rapaport as editor-in-chief of the Daily. The Board claimed that Rapaport was not qualified for the position and this decision seemed to be in violation of the contract between the Board and the Daily. The Board’s decision led to a strike by the Daily’s student editors and the newspaper has been suspended while the dispute continues.

Food service

The University of Michigan’s student newspaper, The Michigan Daily, may go on strike to protest the university’s administra- tion. Last week the Board of Student Publications rejected the appointment of Roger Rapaport as editor-in-chief of the Daily. The Board claimed that Rapaport was not qualified for the position and this decision seemed to be in violation of the contract between the Board and the Daily. The Board’s decision led to a strike by the Daily’s student editors and the newspaper has been suspended while the dispute continues.