Tech bridge pair qualify for national tournament

Phib Schroyan and Kon Lemberhaid, MIT graduate students, have unofficially qualified for the National Intercollegiate Bridge Tournament to be held in Chicago on May 12-14. In order to do this, they were, first, the high finishers in the MIT qualifying tournament, held last fall in February. They went on to the Regionals at Boston. The hand in which they were paired is determined by their national rank. If a tech-anted pair in the Regional tournament, Phil and Kon scored 11 out of a possible 120 points. This gave them the high score in the nation, and, apparently, a very good chance at the national championships. The tech at 12 pairs in the country.

At the Nationals, each pair will play three sessions, and the winning pair will be declared national champions. These matches may be played in regular tournament play, rather than the parallel-style that was used in the regionals. This should make the nationals more dependent on the luck of each pair, rather than on skill.
