The unnecessary burden

In less than two weeks classes will be over, and many of you will be able to take off for home or a vacation. The majority of us, however, will shut down and begin to study for our final exams.

You have, year after year, extended reading period has been used from the usual four days to a full week. This was changed so that the student would have more time to take advantage of the educational experience, instead of a time for preparation for final exams. However, new major of ill reading and finals periods multiple finals on a single day.

Dr. William H. Thomas, April 1966, recorded student opinion on changes for reading and finals period. This study showed that the students who are more interested in mathematics and experimental science, the major of ill reading and finals periods multiple finals on a single day.

The student would like to have more time before finals could be a more educational oriented to eliminate the unnecessary burden while having to prove his work on the exams.

For a true final two exams on a given day puts the student at a serious disadvantage with respect to others. As an example, suppose a student marked on a curve, this could be discussed preparation to finals. If a student is necessary for an exam, no matter how well the student kept up with the course material, he will still have to suffer because one of my friends did not do his homework for the second exam is subject to another handicap. After taking an intensive three hour examination, he is certain not to be fresh and interested, will probably be 'pooped out.' But within an hour, he must be prepared to go through another final.

The UAP has stated that serious considerations are now being given to a reorganization of the period. We urge that any proposed changes be oriented to eliminate the unnecessary burden of more than one final per day.

This is the most pressing problem, and only after it is solved, should further refinements on the system be evaluated.

Letters To The Tech

Sit-in, lock-out

To the Editor:

Why should I, an MIT student, have to give up my seat in the Student Center Library to a BG grumpy old man? I should have the same facilities and resources that we are paying taxes for. As a student, I, too, have a right to study.

We urge that any proposed changes be oriented to eliminate this unnecessary burden of two finals on a single day.

The national organization of college students, which includes the American Association of University Students, has already stated that such a change would be unacceptable.

The unnecessary burden

In today's world, the right to be heard by open-minded people is essential for the development of our society.

To the Editor:

In less than two weeks classes will be over, and many of you will be able to take off for home or a vacation. The majority of us, however, will shut down and begin to study for our final exams.

You have, year after year, extended reading period has been used from the usual four days to a full week. This was changed so that the student would have more time to take advantage of the educational experience, instead of a time for preparation for final exams. However, new major of ill reading and finals periods multiple finals on a single day.

Dr. William H. Thomas, April 1966, recorded student opinion on changes for reading and finals period. This study showed that the students who are more interested in mathematics and experimental science, the major of ill reading and finals periods multiple finals on a single day.

The student would like to have more time before finals could be a more educational oriented to eliminate the unnecessary burden while having to prove his work on the exams.

For a true final two exams on a given day puts the student at a serious disadvantage with respect to others. As an example, suppose a student marked on a curve, this could be discussed preparation to finals. If a student is necessary for an exam, no matter how well the student kept up with the course material, he will still have to suffer because one of my friends did not do his homework for the second exam is subject to another handicap. After taking an intensive three hour examination, he is certain not to be fresh and interested, will probably be 'pooped out.' But within an hour, he must be prepared to go through another final.

The UAP has stated that serious considerations are now being given to a reorganization of the period. We urge that any proposed changes be oriented to eliminate the unnecessary burden of more than one final per day.

This is the most pressing problem, and only after it is solved, should further refinements on the system be evaluated.

Letters To The Tech

Sit-in, lock-out

To the Editor:

Why should I, an MIT student, have to give up my seat in the Student Center Library to a BG grumpy old man? I should have the same facilities and resources that we are paying taxes for. As a student, I, too, have a right to study.

We urge that any proposed changes be oriented to eliminate this unnecessary burden of two finals on a single day.

The national organization of college students, which includes the American Association of University Students, has already stated that such a change would be unacceptable.

The unnecessary burden

In today's world, the right to be heard by open-minded people is essential for the development of our society.

To the Editor:

In less than two weeks classes will be over, and many of you will be able to take off for home or a vacation. The majority of us, however, will shut down and begin to study for our final exams.

You have, year after year, extended reading period has been used from the usual four days to a full week. This was changed so that the student would have more time to take advantage of the educational experience, instead of a time for preparation for final exams. However, new major of ill reading and finals periods multiple finals on a single day.

Dr. William H. Thomas, April 1966, recorded student opinion on changes for reading and finals period. This study showed that the students who are more interested in mathematics and experimental science, the major of ill reading and finals periods multiple finals on a single day.

The student would like to have more time before finals could be a more educational oriented to eliminate the unnecessary burden while having to prove his work on the exams.

For a true final two exams on a given day puts the student at a serious disadvantage with respect to others. As an example, suppose a student marked on a curve, this could be discussed preparation to finals. If a student is necessary for an exam, no matter how well the student kept up with the course material, he will still have to suffer because one of my friends did not do his homework for the second exam is subject to another handicap. After taking an intensive three hour examination, he is certain not to be fresh and interested, will probably be 'pooped out.' But within an hour, he must be prepared to go through another final.

The UAP has stated that serious considerations are now being given to a reorganization of the period. We urge that any proposed changes be oriented to eliminate the unnecessary burden of more than one final per day.

This is the most pressing problem, and only after it is solved, should further refinements on the system be evaluated.

Letters To The Tech

Sit-in, lock-out

To the Editor:

Why should I, an MIT student, have to give up my seat in the Student Center Library to a BG grumpy old man? I should have the same facilities and resources that we are paying taxes for. As a student, I, too, have a right to study.

We urge that any proposed changes be oriented to eliminate this unnecessary burden of two finals on a single day.

The national organization of college students, which includes the American Association of University Students, has already stated that such a change would be unacceptable.

The unnecessary burden

In today's world, the right to be heard by open-minded people is essential for the development of our society.

To the Editor:

In less than two weeks classes will be over, and many of you will be able to take off for home or a vacation. The majority of us, however, will shut down and begin to study for our final exams.

You have, year after year, extended reading period has been used from the usual four days to a full week. This was changed so that the student would have more time to take advantage of the educational experience, instead of a time for preparation for final exams. However, new major of ill reading and finals periods multiple finals on a single day.

Dr. William H. Thomas, April 1966, recorded student opinion on changes for reading and finals period. This study showed that the students who are more interested in mathematics and experimental science, the major of ill reading and finals periods multiple finals on a single day.

The student would like to have more time before finals could be a more educational oriented to eliminate the unnecessary burden while having to prove his work on the exams.

For a true final two exams on a given day puts the student at a serious disadvantage with respect to others. As an example, suppose a student marked on a curve, this could be discussed preparation to finals. If a student is necessary for an exam, no matter how well the student kept up with the course material, he will still have to suffer because one of my friends did not do his homework for the second exam is subject to another handicap. After taking an intensive three hour examination, he is certain not to be fresh and interested, will probably be 'pooped out.' But within an hour, he must be prepared to go through another final.

The UAP has stated that serious considerations are now being given to a reorganization of the period. We urge that any proposed changes be oriented to eliminate the unnecessary burden of more than one final per day.

This is the most pressing problem, and only after it is solved, should further refinements on the system be evaluated.

Letters To The Tech

Sit-in, lock-out

To the Editor:

Why should I, an MIT student, have to give up my seat in the Student Center Library to a BG grumpy old man? I should have the same facilities and resources that we are paying taxes for. As a student, I, too, have a right to study.

We urge that any proposed changes be oriented to eliminate this unnecessary burden of two finals on a single day.

The national organization of college students, which includes the American Association of University Students, has already stated that such a change would be unacceptable.

The unnecessary burden

In today's world, the right to be heard by open-minded people is essential for the development of our society.

To the Editor:

In less than two weeks classes will be over, and many of you will be able to take off for home or a vacation. The majority of us, however, will shut down and begin to study for our final exams.

You have, year after year, extended reading period has been used from the usual four days to a full week. This was changed so that the student would have more time to take advantage of the educational experience, instead of a time for preparation for final exams. However, new major of ill reading and finals periods multiple finals on a single day.

Dr. William H. Thomas, April 1966, recorded student opinion on changes for reading and finals period. This study showed that the students who are more interested in mathematics and experimental science, the major of ill reading and finals periods multiple finals on a single day.

The student would like to have more time before finals could be a more educational oriented to eliminate the unnecessary burden while having to prove his work on the exams.

For a true final two exams on a given day puts the student at a serious disadvantage with respect to others. As an example, suppose a student marked on a curve, this could be discussed preparation to finals. If a student is necessary for an exam, no matter how well the student kept up with the course material, he will still have to suffer because one of my friends did not do his homework for the second exam is subject to another handicap. After taking an intensive three hour examination, he is certain not to be fresh and interested, will probably be 'pooped out.' But within an hour, he must be prepared to go through another final.

The UAP has stated that serious considerations are now being given to a reorganization of the period. We urge that any proposed changes be oriented to eliminate the unnecessary burden of more than one final per day.

This is the most pressing problem, and only after it is solved, should further refinements on the system be evaluated.