Letters to the Tech

"But he (Mr. Stockwell) seems to be a poor man, and he is not going to take advantage of the MIT community. One might stop to wonder whether any of the Tech staff. In stating The Tech's ignorance for the future. It is not a question of being more reliable, but the Tech should refrain from relating personal facts occur in its columns, especially when they are unjustified.

More important still than any of these deficiencies is the attitude of The Tech about its reviewers. The damage that in accurate reviews can do makes the editors of The Tech responsible for the standards they set for its staff. In stating The Tech need not defend its reviewers nor offer their credentials..." you

Impressive action mars 'Pebbles'

The last of her, but, due to the will of the gods and a design plot, she reappears no less than twice. Again we see a poor coile who becomes a bosom buddy of McQueen is the only member of the slap party left on a shore full of 'Irish Chinese, who proceed to sub- ject him to still another blood- bath, terminated by a merciful shot from McQueen which, of course, has further implications for McQueen.

Stereotypes

The characters, of course, are black and white. We find the sailors emulated in a brothel. Silliness will be sordid, and no particular moral is drawn. But when the fat, vulgar laconic (black) attempts to convince the young, coolie that the sailors are unable to perform their duties when they are intoxicated, the battle lines are drawn. Steve McQueen plays the hero.

He is a loser, an individualist, content to take care of his engine if people would just let him run it himself. He is lonesome, but has a sense of humor. He is not the inflexible, stiff-necked hero too often seen. His role is, of course, unusual, but people (especially movie reviewers) like to identify with heroes, and Steve McQueen is a very likable one. What's more, he is convincing (for a hero). Richard Crenna, as the Captain, is a letter-day hero. He heretofore springs from an emotional catharsis, and might be analyzed as a personality. He handles the part well.

The good books.

They have the possibility of being good symptoms. That's if you seek summer scholastics. Seye in Mexico City. Or Acapulco.

Fluorescent fade-out.

There's from a coop up all wary.

What you need for that sallow pallor is some sunshine Vitamin D. There's a good supply of it available at Sunset Beach in Acapulco.

Pallid peepers.

There's no spots in those baby-blue eyes. It's been knocked out by all those exams. Get that vitality back. See what good is still left in the world. Go to Expo 67, Montreal.

Lip linge.

They're letters from good buddies away for the summer. The best way to avoid them is not to be there when they arrive. Be in... Puerto Rico instead.

Racquet squad.

That's the tennis team in your neighborhood during the summer. You'd find snorkeling or scuba diving in the Bahamas would make playing tennis seem like last summer's bad sport.

BLY Dine.

That's all you known summer after summer. A change of palates would do you good. In Bermuda a few sunny moments at Hopping John with a sauce of Paw-Paw Montespan usually does the trick.

Note: If symptoms get worse, see your travel agent or call Eastern.
