salvage states dilemma; No major targets remain and to devote extra manpower to retrieving the oil as it is needed.

By now, according to Salisbury, there is virtually no support of military importance left in the north, and any further bombing will have no effect on a population prepared to exist through years of jungle warfare conditions in order to win. Salisbury reported an interview with Phan Van Ong, Foreign Minister of North Vietnam, in which this of-official intimated that the north would resist ten to twenty years if necessary.

But, should we continue to increase military pressure regardless of the effects we may, according to Salisbury, find our-sevess at war with China. Hanoi has indicated that it would call in Chinese aid if we 1) crossed the 17th parallel, 2) made a landing in the Gulf of Tonkin, or 3) fought near the Chinese border. Several actions from the Demilitarized Zone indicate that we may not be too far from fulfilling these criteria.

Regardless of whether or not the Chinese are invited to enter the conflict, or they intervene on their own, one thing is possible.
