I thereby "disenfranchises" those-as they refer to it-were Jim calling for a basic re-evaluation of then and other non-scientists and students who in fact come to MIT for ion-science majors.

Two unior's day night. approximately 300.

Mrs. Murray attacked the at-

Atheist Murray speaks

By Paul Johnston

Two Juniors urge changes in non-science curriculum

"I came here to corrupt you." With these words, noted atheist Malcom Murray opened her lecture and discussion Tuesday night at a Norman Hackworth Room of the Student Center. Sponsored by the Modern Man Society, the talk drew approximately 300.

"I am by no means a fundamentalist," Mrs. Murray declared immediately after the opening. "I do not wish to suggest that you not believe in God, but I do wish to propose that the way you believe in God is inadequate. I should like to show you that there is a better way of thinking about God."

Mrs. Murray then proceeded to share her experiences as a woman in the academic world. She discussed her views on the role of women in higher education and her experiences as a professor at various universities.

Mrs. Murray's talk was well-received by the audience, who appeared engaged and interested in the topic. The discussion was lively and thought-provoking, with many members of the audience participating in the conversation.

New York City Ballet to perform in Kresge

"[New York City Ballet]" and "Ballet" are both owned and trademarked by the New York City Ballet. Use of these terms should be avoided as they may be confusing and could potentially infringe on the trademark.