Jonathan Kozol to present lecture on ghetto schools

"Ghetto Schools and Negro Children: Who Are the Culturally Deprived?" will be the topic of a lecture to be delivered by Jonathan Kozol Tuesday at 4 p.m. in the Mezzanine Lounge of the Student Center.

Kozol had been a substitute teacher in the Boston school system. His experience prompted his writing Behind an Early Age: The Destruction of the Hearts of Minds of Negro Children in the Boston Public Schools. This book, which has been characterized by reviewers as a work of "surprise, shock, and anger," portrays his observations and experiences in an overcrowded ghetto school on a substitute basis.

Kozol was later dismissed for reading to his pupils the Ballad of the Hundred.

When the Boston Globe recently ran a series of stories from Kozol's book, the preparatory statement was made: "Boston rightly has a world-wide reputation as the city of schools, scholars, and research. But that picture unfortunately has its study side. There are conditions in Boston public schools which are doubly disheartening, first because they exist and secondly, because most Bostonians are unaware of them."

Kozol, who was a Rhodes Scholar after his graduation from Harvard College, authored The Plague of Poppies. He now lives in Boston's South End and continues to work with children as a teacher and as a consultant in curriculum development.

-modernization and subsequent withdrawal would not cause the fall of other nations.

Referring to the fact that Assistant Secretary of State William P. Rogers was also in Boston defending the administration's Vietnam policy, Goodwin stated that administration officials are explaining the war. It is not the same explanation they gave the year before, or the year before that. Inconsistency is not their greatest flaw. The greatest flaw is that what they say is not true."

Goodwin said that he opposed war as an American and a Democrat, but was strongly convinced that what they say is not true.
