Wiesner named science advisor for film series

Continuing in the trend of MIT professors towards involvement in national educational programs, Jerome W. Wiesner, president and chairman of the President's Scientific Advisory Committee, has been named scientific consultant for a series of films featuring renowned scholars, artists, and critics.

Ninety half-hour films will be produced by University-at-Large Programs Inc., a company newly created by Chelsea House. Arthur Schlesinger Jr., president of the company, will be featured in one of the first four films to be completed by January 1. Others featured will be Dr. Marshall McLuhan, the communications theorist; John Kenneth Galbraith, the economist and Barkuzimler Fuld, the designer and architect.

Dr. McLuhan, in the McLuhan tradition, will have his film showing himself making a film about himself. In a more conventional mode, Mr. Galbraith will present a continuation in his running contemporary analyses of urban affairs. The directors of some of these films, David and Albert Mayles, have specialized in documentaries, having done them on the Beatles, Truman Capote, and Joseph Levens, the producer.

Room 7-102, which has been designated by the Planning Office for experimentation in classroom design, resulted from the SCE Design-A-Classroom contest.
