where the crowd shouted for T-shirts. The coeds complied with a few t-shirts. Dean Wadleigh asked the demonstrators to leave again, they objected again, and they left again, except for one brave soul who climbed into second floor window and was never seen again.

At amid of "Holy" the crowd moved down Memorial Drive to the President's house. President Johnson was away, so the crowd burned a few ceremonial computer cards and sang in unison as Dean Wadleigh left them in "Silent Night."

To the sail

Someone shouted "The Sail," and they were off again. That is all they can have," said an institute official who declined to be identified. A few bowlers were quoted by the Campus Pilot near the sail, but then someone in Senator House pulled the fire alarm. As the Cambridge Police arrived with the engines, the cry of "Hide your Avatars!" By 11:50, the demonstration had run out of places to go, and all that remained was Dean Wadleigh near the sail, patiently explaining to those who cared to listen why the Institute was forced to raise tuition.
