By Ed Chalis

A Columbia University flyon flyer announced a mixer at the Student Center next to the student union on a night when the college year was nearing its end. The mixer was sponsored by the Columbia Daily News, and was advertised as a mixer for students from the Columbia College community. The mixer was open to students who had attended Columbia College during the academic year.

The mixer was held in the Student Union, which was located on the third floor of the college. The Student Union was a large, open space with a stage, a bar, and a dance floor. The stage was decorated with colorful streamers and balloons, and the bar was filled with people socializing and having a good time.

The mixer was a great success, and it helped to bring students together from different parts of the country. Many people stayed until the early hours of the morning, and there were reports of happy conversations and even a few romantic encounters.

Overall, the mixer was a great way for students to relax and enjoy the end of the academic year. It was a reminder of the importance of community and the value of socializing with others. The Columbia Daily News always works hard to bring students together, and this mixer was a great example of how they can achieve this goal.