Fortuna Inclementis

Many complain of the vagaries of chance, yet few indeed are those who possess the daring and imagination to attempt to alter the course of destiny. Indeed, a recent survey has shown that only twenty-five percent of the American population is unlucky. The case is clear-cut — something must be done about the American unlucky case. It must be done quickly. We propose a positive solution to this pressing dilemma.

Before attacking the problem, some necessary information must be given. In Darwin's theory of evolution, it is stated that if a trait and its opposite are present, one trait or the other, conducive to survival will eventually predominate. However, if one trait definitely produces life and the other, inescapably, death, the former trait will become universal in the course of a single generation.

Hence, we must make luckiness mean life and lack of luck synonomous with death if we are to make inroads on the problem. We can do this by having everyone flip a coin and try to get heads. Those who succeed will live and those who, alas, get tails will be killed. Thus, only the lucky people will survive.

Doing this will reduce the population of one of its present size, but that will not decrease the nation's worth. On the contrary, we will have a small, lucky nation which will surely fare much better in foreign affairs than we are presently doing.

Afterthought: If this proposal is not accepted, it will just be our luck.

bears of the Kennedy clan); fourth, all students majoring in science or engineering since they've been "getting away with murder so long in avoiding the draft, that they should be even better in Asia"; and fifth, other students.

Last to Asia

Mrs. Last also explained that she will be going to Vietnam along with MIT's undergraduates. Harvard hasarat last fall on the draft card on which she received the special classification of IA (delinquents). Accompanying the draft card was the following letter.

Dear Eleanor,

Your activities at MIT have been deemed subversive. The specific charges listed against you includes: (1) protecting students from the draft; (2) revealing the secret regulations of the Selective Service Agency to students that they can avoid draft liability; and (3) writing five letters to local draft boards so that they will grant student petitions for reclasification. Thus, I am happy to send you a I-A classification.

With love, stood in the way of the rampaging mob, and the Don Ives was PT 7 Men's Ave., while their leader stood forward and proclaimed that if he should be shot down shall not damage their stop; for they have been supervised by the MIT Lack of Planning Office. If they should damage them, talons shall be raised once again.

On to Chapel

Having issued this warning, the YAA members, on the march which proceeded to the Chapel. The mob was confronted at the Chapel by the Belligerent Theons, consuls proteted to the mob that the Chapel could not be used for any antigovernment purpose. One of the consuls quoted from the will of the donor of the Chapel, W.S. Woogin!
