coming a strong political power with a strong military one. Such a situation leads to the use of terror tactics by the military power, a strategy which Chomsky claimed has been used by the U.S.
Mandela Reports
Having recently returned from Vietnam, Professor Mandela spoke primarily from personal experience. Citing a quotation from a US officer, "We had to destroy the city to save it," he showed the effects of this policy on civilian morale and attitudes toward America.

Vivid descriptions of Vietnam, ese refugee camps, high-lighted much of his speech. The general attitude appeared to him to be that things could get no worse and that the war should be ended in gaining attendance, although a small crowd eventually gather-led to Saigon. This statement, he pointed out, takes
a situation leads to the use of a strong military one. Such
a situation leads to the use of
terror tactics by the military
power, a strategy which Chomsky
claimed has been used by the U.S.
Mandela Reports
Having recently returned from
Vietnam, Professor Mandela spoke primarily from personal
experience. Citing a quotation
from a US officer, "We had to
destroy the city to save it," he showed the effects of this
policy on civilian morale and
attitudes toward America.

Vivid descriptions of Vietnam,
ese refugee camps, high-lighted
much of his speech. The general
attitude appeared to him to be
that things could get no worse
and that the war should be ended
in gaining attendance, although
a small crowd eventually gather-
led to Saigon. This statement, he pointed out, takes
a situation leads to the use of
a strong military one. Such
a situation leads to the use of
terror tactics by the military
power, a strategy which Chomsky
claimed has been used by the U.S.
Mandela Reports
Having recently returned from
Vietnam, Professor Mandela spoke primarily from personal
experience. Citing a quotation
from a US officer, "We had to
destroy the city to save it," he showed the effects of this
policy on civilian morale and
attitudes toward America.

Vivid descriptions of Vietnam,
ese refugee camps, high-lighted
much of his speech. The general
attitude appeared to him to be
that things could get no worse
and that the war should be ended
in gaining attendance, although
a small crowd eventually gather-
led to Saigon. This statement, he pointed out, takes
a situation leads to the use of
a strong military one. Such
a situation leads to the use of
terror tactics by the military
power, a strategy which Chomsky
claimed has been used by the U.S.
Mandela Reports
Having recently returned from
Vietnam, Professor Mandela spoke primarily from personal
experience. Citing a quotation
from a US officer, "We had to
destroy the city to save it," he showed the effects of this
policy on civilian morale and
attitudes toward America.

Vivid descriptions of Vietnam,
ese refugee camps, high-lighted
much of his speech. The general
attitude appeared to him to be
that things could get no worse
and that the war should be ended
in gaining attendance, although
a small crowd eventually gather-
led to Saigon. This statement, he pointed out, takes
a situation leads to the use of
a strong military one. Such
a situation leads to the use of
terror tactics by the military
power, a strategy which Chomsky
claimed has been used by the U.S.
Mandela Reports
Having recently returned from
Vietnam, Professor Mandela spoke primarily from personal
experience. Citing a quotation
from a US officer, "We had to
destroy the city to save it," he showed the effects of this
policy on civilian morale and
attitudes toward America.

Vivid descriptions of Vietnam,
ese refugee camps, high-lighted
much of his speech. The general
attitude appeared to him to be
that things could get no worse
and that the war should be ended
in gaining attendance, although
a small crowd eventually gather-
led to Saigon. This statement, he pointed out, takes
a situation leads to the use of
a strong military one. Such
a situation leads to the use of
terror tactics by the military
power, a strategy which Chomsky
claimed has been used by the U.S.
Mandela Reports
Having recently returned from
Vietnam, Professor Mandela spoke primarily from personal
experience. Citing a quotation
from a US officer, "We had to
destroy the city to save it," he showed the effects of this
policy on civilian morale and
attitudes toward America.

Vivid descriptions of Vietnam,
ese refugee camps, high-lighted
much of his speech. The general
attitude appeared to him to be
that things could get no worse
and that the war should be ended
in gaining attendance, although
a small crowd eventually gather-
led to Saigon. This statement, he pointed out, takes
a situation leads to the use of
a strong military one. Such
a situation leads to the use of
terror tactics by the military
power, a strategy which Chomsky
claimed has been used by the U.S.