Student Power

Across the nation, people are asking serious questions about student power: what is it, what does it mean to be a student power? We believe that it is not only the right of students to be citizens, to involve themselves in the affairs of the world outside their campus, but is their duty as the people who will one day be running the country. Any MIT student who does not, we believe, is hesitating to do away with the old traditions. Future discussions toward improving student environment should be one goal of the new leadership.

Having offered this suggestion to Inscomm, we would like to comment on the rest of the conference. We found it to be informative yet slighly frustrating. Future discussions toward improving student environment should be one goal of the new leadership.

Letters to the Tech

An Appeal

To the Editor:

The Reader's poll shows that most students here have the wisdom not to volunteer for military service. May I appeal to those students who have not yet decided: before giving the Vietnam war should be allowed to advertise by volunteering, don't be afraid that this is to be considered a political statement. This is a political statement. It is also a war against the war.

Margaret A. Eikrem '68

The Exchange

To the Editor:

We were pleased and delighted to hear of the success of the recent MIT-Wellesley Exchange Days. We hope that this exchange program will be extended to other New England universities with which we already have a cross-registration program and whom we hope will also be properly welcomed -- such as Harvard University. The format of the exchange days should be the same -- with interested MIT students visiting Harvard one day, and with Harvard students visiting MIT on another day. Free meals should be provided to the MIT students to whom the damage is done to the program. A realistic account of our application for the right to send our military over to a tragically confused civil war is given in the article "Vietnam and Quit Viet." by Jonathan Schell on page 11 of the New York Review of Books.

David Friesch

Exchange: Con...

To the Editor:

We were pleased and delighted to hear of the success of the recent MIT-Wellesley Exchange Days. We hope that this exchange program will be extended to other New England universities with which we already have a cross-registration program and whom we hope will also be properly welcomed -- such as Harvard University. The format of the exchange days should be the same -- with interested MIT students visiting Harvard one day, and with Harvard students visiting MIT on another day. Free meals should be provided to the MIT students to whom the damage is done to the program. A realistic account of our application for the right to send our military over to a tragically confused civil war is given in the article "Vietnam and Quit Viet." by Jonathan Schell on page 11 of the New York Review of Books.

David Friesch

The Reporter

To the Editor:

After attending the Exchange Days, we've come to the conclusion that English is a serious problem in the United States. Many students have difficulty understanding each other, let alone the complex ideas behind the rating system.

Because many Johnson voters had no idea that McCarthy's lead in the canvassers ratings grew to 2-to-1, and during the last weekend, when Mr. Kunin was there, the figures were reversed, the figures were then used to convince the voters to insure their making a "Gaussian-type distribution" analysis for one day of canvassing. But the canvassers used in evaluating the figures were not used to get only a general feel for voter sentiment over a period of time, but rather the week of February 6th, Johnson had a slight edge, during the week of February 6th, Johnson had a slight edge, during the week of February 6th, Johnson had a slight edge. The idea behind the rating system is to insulate the voter from the canvassers' ratings.

Steve Gilbert '71

Open Letter to Foreign Students

To the Editor:

I am writing to express my desire to help those foreign students who are interested in coming to MIT from Canada at great expense.

Peter Lindner '71, Roy Furman '71

Managing Editor

Front page photo of smokestack by Steve Greiner.