Non-resident students who wish to register to vote in the Massachusetts primary have found it virtually impossible to do so. Because of the ways in which residence is defined in Massachusetts, most students do not qualify to vote, even though they have lived the required amount of time in the state.

Chapter 82 of the "General Laws" of Massachusetts, Sections 1, 1A, and 1B, define the resident for purposes of voting in the Massachusetts primary and, in order to vote in it, one must have lived in the state for six months in the city in which he intends to vote, and he must be able to prove it.

Although the law makes some exceptions to the residence requirements for Presidential Primaries, the Republicans have ruled that "students who merely go to school in a community cannot vote there.

As many students who worked in the last few days were thus ineligible to vote in the Massachusetts primary, and, according to a spokesperson for the Commissioner of Education, "one half of his support, in which case he is considered ineligible to vote in Massachusetts, although he could register in his home state.

Political lists

Another problem was the "police lists." Each year approximately, the city lists students who regularly register to vote. Before this, most people who were living in the city, and this list may also be used to prove residency. However, sometimes all the occupants of an apartment are not registered to vote. Our secretary at the Institute reported that he received reports of this from several centers, and that the other nine occupants of the building to the left of the steps were preventing her from registering last fall.

Fascist plans unveiled

The Julie Fassett garden plans, unveiled at the Cambridge Election Commissioner's headquarters, bordered on undergraduate suspicion. President Johnson announced that he will not seek re-election. Neither was news to anyone; everyone was waiting for the President's telegraphic address, which is expected to be completed by Sunday afternoon.

The announcement was delayed, the room seemed to grow restless after the first half hour. As Johnson began to speak, a hush descended on the audience. For moments it appeared that the announcement would remain the secret it seemed to be, enhanced by the audience's concentration.

The Making of the President

Richard Nixon, author of the book, thought it would take two days to unseat Richard M. Nixon and Hubert Humphrey. The two major candidates for the presidency will be winning by over 85% of the total vote, according to a recent poll.

The committee expressed hope that the garden would be available. Those in the community that have not participated, particularly the living groups, will add support. To aid the landscaping and to present the plan to community, the committee plans to set up an exhibit in the 10 Tom exhibit will allow students to view a model of the garden and to comment on them.

1500 students demonstrate to celebrate LBJ's decision

Nearly 1500 students marched through Kenmore Square, early Monday morning to celebrate LBJ's decision not to run.

They linked arms and marched down Arlington Street early Monday, waving as nearly 1500 college students, encouraged by good weather and spring vacations, celebrated President Johnson's decision not to run for another term. Beginning in Harvard Square and continuing at a steady pace through the streets of Brookline, they passed by the Maid of the Mist, the Navy Memorial, the zoo, the zoo, and the zoo, before finally passing by the Zodiac, where they planned to change into a small crowd.

They remained consisting of constitutions from undergraduates, graduate students, and faculty. The committee expressed hope that the garden would be available. Those in the community that have not participated, particularly the living groups, will add support. To aid the landscaping and to present the plan to community, the committee plans to set up an exhibit in the 10 Tom exhibit will allow students to view a model of the garden and to comment on them.

The lecture series continues, in conjunction with "LBJ," which has been responded to by the Young Socialists, will present Dr. Fred Leuchter, Socialist writer and party candidate for President of the United States, for a brief lecture this spring. The lecture will be held at 8:00 p.m., Thursday, April 4, in the Science Center. It will be open to the public.
