By Randy Hawthorne

In another action yesterday the faculty called for the creation of an MIT Community Service Fund to support social service work by all members of the Institute community. The fund will have 12 members, one of whom will be the President of MIT, some of whom will be students. They are empowered to solicit contributions from the faculty, staff, and students.

The proposal was first action reported earlier in The Tech in which the faculty bailed at a faculty tax. (The IACF has offered the fund is $10,000 donation.)

Service fund established

The MIT Social Service Committee will present a proposal this week to Rosbury and Cambridge in an effort to secure campus support for the fund.

Butner, Hageman comment

Pass-fail offers fresh many new opportunities

By Harry Weiss

"Academic risk" should become a way of life for the class of 1972 if pass-fail proves workable, according to Mr. Peter Butner, executive officer of the freshmen Advisory Council. In an interview with The Tech Butner explained that students often do not take a course in which they are unsure of their abilities if they feel that they might receive a low grade. In the case of freshmen, he said, one must be aware that the freshmen may not feel that they are capable enough to handle a course.

One major problem which must be faced next year is that of

"Pass-fail is designed to make students more objective in their evaluation of their abilities. In the past, students have been too quick to judge themselves as "good" or "bad" students. The new system will provide a more realistic way of evaluating one's self."