Q-Club has just transformed itself into a junior honorary. Beaver Key, the existing senior honorary, appears to have seen its last days, due to the refusal of its members to elect its successors. This appears to be the day of the changing honorary.

The reasons for the Q-Club move appear to be sound and logical. The idea that "honorary" members of a class can be determined after one year is rather absurd. We applaud the members of the class of 1970 for their action.

Therefore, we have only one question to ask the faculty: What do you have to hide?

The shifting honorary

Closed doors

On the front page of this issue, there is a small correction notice saying that Professor Richard Douglas, head of the Department of Humanities, did not oppose the selection of members by past members. This appears to be very inaccurate. The statement is closed to students. The reasons themselves are closed to students.

Q-Club has just transformed itself into a junior honorary. Beaver Key, the existing senior honorary, appears to have seen its last days, due to the refusal of its members to elect its successors. This appears to be the day of the changing honorary.

The reasons for the Q-Club move appear to be sound and logical. The idea that "honorary" members of a class can be determined after one year is rather absurd. We applaud the members of the class of 1970 for their action.

Therefore, we have only one question to ask the faculty: What do you have to hide?

The shifting honorary

Q-Club has just transformed itself into a junior honorary. Beaver Key, the existing senior honorary, appears to have seen its last days, due to the refusal of its members to elect its successors. This appears to be the day of the changing honorary.

The reasons for the Q-Club move appear to be sound and logical. The idea that "honorary" members of a class can be determined after one year is rather absurd. We applaud the members of the class of 1970 for their action.

Therefore, we have only one question to ask the faculty: What do you have to hide?

The shifting honorary

Q-Club has just transformed itself into a junior honorary. Beaver Key, the existing senior honorary, appears to have seen its last days, due to the refusal of its members to elect its successors. This appears to be the day of the changing honorary.

The reasons for the Q-Club move appear to be sound and logical. The idea that "honorary" members of a class can be determined after one year is rather absurd. We applaud the members of the class of 1970 for their action.

Therefore, we have only one question to ask the faculty: What do you have to hide?

The shifting honorary

Q-Club has just transformed itself into a junior honorary. Beaver Key, the existing senior honorary, appears to have seen its last days, due to the refusal of its members to elect its successors. This appears to be the day of the changing honorary.

The reasons for the Q-Club move appear to be sound and logical. The idea that "honorary" members of a class can be determined after one year is rather absurd. We applaud the members of the class of 1970 for their action.

Therefore, we have only one question to ask the faculty: What do you have to hide?

The shifting honorary

Q-Club has just transformed itself into a junior honorary. Beaver Key, the existing senior honorary, appears to have seen its last days, due to the refusal of its members to elect its successors. This appears to be the day of the changing honorary.

The reasons for the Q-Club move appear to be sound and logical. The idea that "honorary" members of a class can be determined after one year is rather absurd. We applaud the members of the class of 1970 for their action.

Therefore, we have only one question to ask the faculty: What do you have to hide?

The shifting honorary

Q-Club has just transformed itself into a junior honorary. Beaver Key, the existing senior honorary, appears to have seen its last days, due to the refusal of its members to elect its successors. This appears to be the day of the changing honorary.

The reasons for the Q-Club move appear to be sound and logical. The idea that "honorary" members of a class can be determined after one year is rather absurd. We applaud the members of the class of 1970 for their action.

Therefore, we have only one question to ask the faculty: What do you have to hide?