English student views us

By Sandy Caimcross

(The Editors, Sandy Caimcross, 20 year old student at the Amherst College in Massachusetts, was the last year to come to America this summer. Sandy is the only son of Ralph and June Caimcross of Amherst, New York. As an American, he has just come back to the United States, the East Coast upper class especially, who find him aMost of the appeal of Simon and Garfunkel, for instance, is in the quality of the poetry in the words of their songs. And yet, when I went to hear them sing at a huge amphitheater in Washington, D.C., it was packed to over-flowing. And when, the next month, I went to hear Jimi Hendrix perform, I was struck by a similarity between his style and that of Van, a men listened to by the most only the most intellectual minority in our environment. American society, like almost any other, is conformist, but it is a society to which many foreigners would glad to conform.

Student petitions circulated seeking pass–pass grading

Petition

Student movement seeking to make major changes in the educational system of the Institute has begun. It has been called the "pass–pass" system. It is a student movement that has been gaining momentum in the past few weeks. The petition, which was started by students of various classes, is being circulated on campus.

The petition reads as follows:

"We, the undersigned students of the Institute, hereby petition the administration to implement a "pass–pass" grading system. This system would eliminate the need for grades and would allow students to freely choose which courses they wish to take. It would also allow for a more liberal and less stressful academic environment."