Johnson's speech: Look to the future

Even after Johnson's report to Congress Friday had many listeners, including the press, who might have been satisfied, the matter was far from closed. Perhaps the most obvious way that the speech was an admission was that it was admitted in the first place. For a long time it has been a virtual legal fiction that the President was or is operating in the country's interest. The latest statement of the President seems sure of why they had been silent all the way. The President of the United States, however, has been singularly hampered in his efforts to express the will of the American people. The voice of the President of the United States is that of the people, and its message, however it may have been altered or distorted, is that of the people. Again a direct quotation is in order:

"I would sooner see the faculty commit overcommitment to these matters than undercommitment." -Johnson
