Committee heads discuss publicity

By Charles Mango

The old issues of student participation in the decision-making process were given a rebirth by the Committee of Committee Chairs (CC) at a meeting on Monday. The discussion, consisting of student members of faculty committees and department chairmen, and other interested persons tried to center its attention on student participation, government structure, and agenda. The argument centered around communication of the activities of the committees and of the formation of some new groups. The proposals for the improvement are as follows:

1. All committees should be required to submit agendas for publication in the Cambridge City Council.

2. The question is not of the formation of joint student-faculty committees to discuss the proposed changes, but of giving each committee more freedom to make decisions.

3. The essential viewpoint of the discussion was phrased by one of the committee members: "The question is not to be taken out of the hands of the students and faculty." It was felt that the proposa was more likely to be considered by the more interested groups and less likely to be considered by the broader group.

The key point in the discussion was the recognition that the primary concern of the CSR was the education of the students, and that the essential viewpoint of the discussion was that the students should be given more freedom to make their own decisions. It was felt that the proposa was more likely to be considered by the more interested groups and less likely to be considered by the broader group.

The key point in the discussion was the recognition that the primary concern of the CSR was the education of the students, and that the essential viewpoint of the discussion was that the students should be given more freedom to make their own decisions. It was felt that the proposa was more likely to be considered by the more interested groups and less likely to be considered by the broader group.

Committee Membership

Other suggestions relating to existing committees were that membership in committees should be open to all interested persons who are willing to make a serious and ongoing effort to work with the committee.

A suggestion for improving the structure was that a whole was made with reference to the importance of departmental problems in the students. The suggestion was that a whole was made with reference to the importance of departmental problems in the students.

The suggestion was that a whole was made with reference to the importance of departmental problems in the students.

Committee Membership

Other suggestions relating to existing committees were that membership in committees should be open to all interested persons who are willing to make a serious and ongoing effort to work with the committee.

A suggestion for improving the structure was that a whole was made with reference to the importance of departmental problems in the students. The suggestion was that a whole was made with reference to the importance of departmental problems in the students.

The suggestion was that a whole was made with reference to the importance of departmental problems in the students.