In his final editorial last year, Mike Rodburg '68 discussed many of the issues which have since become of paramount importance. The question of what has been done is relatively easy to answer. There has been a lot done to involve the students however, there are still several items which disturb us. The question of what has been done is relatively easy to answer. There has been a lot done to involve the students in the "decision-making processes", whatever they are. There has been a lot done to involve the students in the "decision-making processes", whatever they are.

The question of what has been done is relatively easy to answer. There has been a lot done to involve the students in the "decision-making processes", whatever they are. There has been a lot done to involve the students in the "decision-making processes", whatever they are. There has been a lot done to involve the students in the "decision-making processes", whatever they are. There has been a lot done to involve the students in the "decision-making processes", whatever they are. There has been a lot done to involve the students in the "decision-making processes", whatever they are. There has been a lot done to involve the students in the "decision-making processes", whatever they are. There has been a lot done to involve the students in the "decision-making processes", whatever they are. There has been a lot done to involve the students in the "decision-making processes", whatever they are. There has been a lot done to involve the students in the "decision-making processes", whatever they are. There has been a lot done to involve the students in the "decision-making processes", whatever they are. There has been a lot done to involve the students in the "decision-making processes", whatever they are. There has been a lot done to involve the students in the "decision-making processes", whatever they are. There has been a lot done to involve the students in the "decision-making processes", whatever they are.