Centralized kitchen may go up after West Campus renovations

buying all 15 meals under this plan will have to pay about $570 per term even though he will be ineligible for unlimited seconds.

West Campus changes

A long-range plan for the development of West Campus was mentioned by Dean Wadeigh. Burton House will be renovated, eventually accommodating about 325 people. With the addition of MacGregor House, each West Campus dorm will average about 350 residents. This number is about the break-even point for dorm kitchens. However, a large kitchen may be built; the economics resulting from centralization enabling substantial changes to be made in the structure of Commons. Dean Wadeigh emphasized the desirability of this move in retaining its own dining facilities.

Declining quality

Apparently some students considered as to whether the student protest concerned compulsory Commons or the declining quality of the meat. Most of the operational comments, especially against the menus, were directed at Stouffer's representatives, Terry Moore.

MIT will not subsidize its dining services, for this would be unfair, in Dean Wadeigh's opinion, to those students who do not live in dorms. If a person objects to living in a dorm on compulsory commons, he can move out. However, kitchenettes similar to those in McCormick Hall may eventually be installed in Baker and Burton, enabling residents to cook for themselves on the weekend.
