Mid-Atlantic sailors take Pine Cup from NEISA

Last weekend the Mid-Atlantic Sailing Association defeated the New England Sailing Association in a head to head clash over the Pine Cup Trophy offered by the Coast Guard Academy. It was the first time in three years that the Pine Cup trophy had been up for grabs.

At MIT's co-captain, David McCracken had won the New England Shoppe Championship in 1969, the in the tough Greater Boston League, earning an 11-12 record against such teams as Harvard, R.U. and B.C. Once again that season was the random result of finding nine or ten players that could play to the standards of the community.

Our fine track team draws their strength on the strong showing of one or two individuals, and other sports show similar patterns.

Football is a game involving twenty-two starters, four or five "special players," plus an adequate bench or, in effect, a squad of about fifty football players. If MIT is to field a football team, the athletic department must work in coordination with the admissions office and the financial aid office and the various academic departments throughout the school.

MIT's football team has had a good season, and the team has spent a considerable amount of their time in high school academic pursuits, many of these students with nearly the academic potential of Techmen have been able to pursue other fields of endeavor such as athletics.

The Mid-Atlantic team was led by Ted Jenkins, a senior at MIT. Jenkins has a master's degree in mechanical engineering and is the captain of the MIT football team.

The Mid-Atlantic team was defeated by the New England team 3-0.

Ruggers 1-2 during summer; optimistic after large turnout

The MIT rugby club, playing under the collective pseudonym of the Charles River Summer Select, played a series of matches against the New England team. The matches were held at various locations, including the Charles River Boat Club, the MIT hockey rink, and the Harvard Stadium.

The matches were played on a hot, humid day, and the MIT team was able to win two of the three matches. The final score of the game was MIT 8, New England 2. The MIT team was led by captain John Zolits, who made a strong showing.

Tech ruggers pile it on in a recent scrimmage during the summer. The team was preparing as the Charles River Summer Select, compiled a 2-1-2 record.
