Students clash with administration, cops

Members of the Joint Advisory Committee of the MIT Corporation and several students admitted after the struggle at the door listen as Steve Carhart '70 and Steve Ehrmann '71 present student requests for a moratorium on October 15.

Steve Ehrmann '71 then stood up and read the resolution passed by the General Assembly.

Gary Gut '70 noted that Wellesley College had officially ended its teaching on October 15 and urged that MIT take an institutional stand.

In response Johnson read a statement of his personal views on the war. He condemned it as having a debilitating effect on the country in general and on higher education in particular. However, Johnson also stated that he did not believe that closing the Institute entirely would be the most desirable course of action and urged the adoption of an alternative position.

MIT would observe the Moratorium, said Johnson, in the following ways: postponing the regular faculty meeting scheduled for October 15, providing facilities for anyone who wished to hold discussion groups or meetings about the war and the moratorium, and allowing each class to decide for itself whether it wished to meet on the 15th. He noted that while only the faculty, not the Corporation, had voted to close on the 15th, the Institute would "provide maximum opportunities for individuals to follow the dictates of their consciences."

Pete Bohmer G pointed out the differences between the students and the Corporation. "We hung out outside as you said, "The only way that you can stop this war is by taking over the building." You can cancel all the classes you want, but you can't stop the war."

The crowd outside calmed down with other students and the meeting started again. Inside, Steve Carhart '70 was quietly urging the members of the Corporation to show their support for October 15.

Students Admitted

The crowd outside calmed considerably after several of the march's leaders were admitted along with other students and the meeting started again. Inside, Steve Carhart '70 was quietly urging the members of the Corporation to show their support for October 15.
