Petition for MIRV delay draws 200 faculty names

Over 200 faculty members have signed a petition calling on the MIT faculty and Corporation to take a "firm public position on MIRV, military research, and the arms race," according to Professor Francis Low of the Department of Physics. The petition was circulated following the November Actions by an ad hoc group of faculty members (many of whom were members of the Union of Concerned Scientists) who sought to prevent the tactics of the November Actions from diverting attention from the very important issue of military research at MIT.

After a few brief comments by Faculty members, Salvador moved that those involved in the possible secession of the President's office could be identified be expelled. Noting that the occupation had been for the sake of the few. He concluded by saying that he told the radical groups that he had nothing to do with the occupation or the inclination to grant the demands.

Johnson then addressed the faculty, stressing the need for unity and the need to take action on the present situation in order to avoid further polarization. He was applauded when he declared, "One thing I will not do is negotiate on the basis of an ultimatum or the occupation of an office."
