Let's begin with the law

Students of the Georgetown Law Center are forming a growing cadre of radical law students. We are committed to remaking the legal system to reflect concepts of justice and humanity, not money and property. The law must work for freedom, not oppression. If you are not cut out to be a full-time street fighter, you might want to give the law a try.

Genet entered US illegally

not an occasional cute word on the radio.

The most startling revelation of all comes about three-quarters of the way through Genet's talk, at which time he revealed that the U.S. Customs Service had denied him a visa to travel to this country, and that as a consequence, he had slipped in illegally. The approximately 65 year old Genet has several felony convictions on his record, and consequently was denied entry to this country. Nonetheless, he said, he had promised several Black Panthers a while ago in Paris that he would do whatever was necessary to support their struggle. He said he would not turn away from the law because it might mean illegal entry into this country. Thus, he takes a great risk every time he appears in public.

Panther spokesmen at the rally said they were trying to raise $12,000 that night to be used for the Bobby Seale Legal Defense Fund. Seals is currently awaiting trial at the New Haven on charges of murdering a fellow Panther in that city. The Panther claims the whole affair is a frame-up, and that it is simply a part of planned program of genocide against the Black Panther Party by the U.S. Government. If Seals is found guilty and sent to the electric chair, the Panthers say they will "take to the streets."

Panther Brother Doug Milam spoke immediately following Genet and called on white revorromote to organize a workshop, get off their asses, and get away from the "safe" campuses. The Panthers, who believe in class struggle, think that the support of white radical college students alone will not be enough to make a successful revolution in the white revolution.

Andersen, "we have more than their share of white students who have the time for whites to pay more than lip service."

MIT cites small need for more draft advice

All these factors have combined to limit the amount of counseling that MIT can do.

The decision to incorporate the undergraduate office into the existing draft service, is based on the nature of the current draft problems. Most undergraduates get their 2-S for four years without much trouble. The number of students who have academic problems and thus need more counseling is relatively small.

In the Graduate School, however, things are not as simple. Since graduates have been eliminated more grad students have been in need of counseling on possible ways to finish their education before having to worry about fulfilling their military obligations. They need advice on special problems that the combined office could best be handled by those students already handling the graduate end of it. Additionally, it was felt that the grad office would be better equipped to handle the problems of those members of the staff who are in need of advice. This group includes instructors, professors and lab employees who are under 35.

The other aspect of the decision to combine the Selective Service offices which upset many students was the way in which the decision was made. It originated within the offices of the Deans of the Graduate School and Student Affairs, without the advice or approval of the Faculty Advisory Committee.

Though many students feel that as a major decision it should have been more thoroughl ly considered, the procedure is not an unusual one. It should be pointed out that the two offices are to be run by a decision of the Deans' offices. As the move is primarily administrative, involving the shifting of offices and personnel, it falls entirely within the domain of the Deans' offices.

The Deans did not consider the consolidation to be of major importance, nor did they expect it to cause any of the furor it apparently has. Looking back on the decision, Dean Nylhart admitted that it might have been a good idea to go to the Faculty Advisory Committee on Selective Service, because they did not feel it was necessary.
