Bicycle thefts on rise: 100 stolen last year

Bicycle thefts have been a major problem in Cambridge for many years. In the past two years or so, however, Campus Patrol has noted a dramatic upsurge in the reported number of thefts on campus. This year is due to the increasing numbers of people who are using bicycles to commute to and from the Institute, but it is also due to the increased sophistication of the thieves. Organized bicycle-theft rings now get their operations up and running, local bicycle shops have seen a sharp rise in sales of high-quality locks, and the thieves have split for California with Pele Bommer and their friends.

Another headache for Professor Sheridan is the Berkeley Police Department's refusal to cooperate fully with MIT's own investigation of the situation. On the one hand, MIT has agreed that students will have the right to be heard by a hearing officer if they are charged with any criminal offense. On the other hand, Sheridan said that he would not be buying, only leasing, MIT's negotiations with the city in return for a zoning variance for Hamilton House are in the final stages, and the case for Hamilton House was finally presented last week to the city's Board of Appeals. A decision on the case is expected soon.

Nearly 100 MIT people last February expressed the common frustration that wells up when you approach the bike rack and find your bike missing. The stolen vehicles represent something on the order of a $100,000 loss. As one graduate (now an instructor) complained to a letter to several of the MIT administration, such losses have been对我说过的自行车在2和4之间, only leasing against students who can't afford them.

The old headquarters, on the second floor of the Old Barracks, is a shell. The building has been abandoned for many years, and the City has been trying to find a use for it. The City has even tried to rent it to the Wellesley College women's dormitory, but no takers have been found. The City is now considering using the building for a combined Psychiatric Service. MIT's Medical Department is also looking at the building as a possible location for its expanded Psychiatric Service.

The move is being made to enlarge the Institute's facilities. The Wellesley College women's dormitory is another possible location for the expansion. The City has even considered using the building as a possible location for the Wellesley College women's dormitory, but no takers have been found. The City is now considering using the building for a combined Psychiatric Service. MIT's Medical Department is also looking at the building as a possible location for its expanded Psychiatric Service.

A series of emergency meetings involving the MIT administration and the MIT police resulted in several changes in the rules governing bicycle thefts. The police department has been asked to increase its patrols, and the Institute has agreed to provide additional security lighting in high-risk areas. The Institute has also agreed to provide additional security lighting in high-risk areas.

Bicycle thefts are a major problem in Cambridge for many years. In the past two years or so, however, Campus Patrol has noted a dramatic upsurge in the reported number of thefts on campus. This year is due to the increasing numbers of people who are using bicycles to commute to and from the Institute, but it is also due to the increased sophistication of the thieves. Organized bicycle-theft rings now get their operations up and running, local bicycle shops have seen a sharp rise in sales of high-quality locks, and the thieves have split for California with Pele Bommer and their friends.

Another headache for Professor Sheridan is the Berkeley Police Department's refusal to cooperate fully with MIT's own investigation of the situation. On the one hand, MIT has agreed that students will have the right to be heard by a hearing officer if they are charged with any criminal offense. On the other hand, Sheridan said that he would not be buying, only leasing, MIT's negotiations with the city in return for a zoning variance for Hamilton House are in the final stages, and the case for Hamilton House was finally presented last week to the city's Board of Appeals. A decision on the case is expected soon.

Nearly 100 MIT people last February expressed the common frustration that wells up when you approach the bike rack and find your bike missing. The stolen vehicles represent something on the order of a $100,000 loss. As one graduate (now an instructor) complained to a letter to several of the MIT administration, such losses have been对我说过的自行车在2和4之间, only leasing against students who can't afford them.

The old headquarters, on the second floor of the Old Barracks, is a shell. The building has been abandoned for many years, and the City has been trying to find a use for it. The City has even tried to rent it to the Wellesley College women's dormitory, but no takers have been found. The City is now considering using the building for a combined Psychiatric Service. MIT's Medical Department is also looking at the building as a possible location for its expanded Psychiatric Service.

The move is being made to enlarge the Institute's facilities. The Wellesley College women's dormitory is another possible location for the expansion. The City has even considered using the building as a possible location for the Wellesley College women's dormitory, but no takers have been found. The City is now considering using the building for a combined Psychiatric Service. MIT's Medical Department is also looking at the building as a possible location for its expanded Psychiatric Service.

A series of emergency meetings involving the MIT administration and the MIT police resulted in several changes in the rules governing bicycle thefts. The police department has been asked to increase its patrols, and the Institute has agreed to provide additional security lighting in high-risk areas. The Institute has also agreed to provide additional security lighting in high-risk areas.

Bicycle thefts are a major problem in Cambridge for many years. In the past two years or so, however, Campus Patrol has noted a dramatic upsurge in the reported number of thefts on campus. This year is due to the increasing numbers of people who are using bicycles to commute to and from the Institute, but it is also due to the increased sophistication of the thieves. Organized bicycle-theft rings now get their operations up and running, local bicycle shops have seen a sharp rise in sales of high-quality locks, and the thieves have split for California with Pele Bommer and their friends.

Another headache for Professor Sheridan is the Berkeley Police Department's refusal to cooperate fully with MIT's own investigation of the situation. On the one hand, MIT has agreed that students will have the right to be heard by a hearing officer if they are charged with any criminal offense. On the other hand, Sheridan said that he would not be buying, only leasing, MIT's negotiations with the city in return for a zoning variance for Hamilton House are in the final stages, and the case for Hamilton House was finally presented last week to the city's Board of Appeals. A decision on the case is expected soon.

Nearly 100 MIT people last February expressed the common frustration that wells up when you approach the bike rack and find your bike missing. The stolen vehicles represent something on the order of a $100,000 loss. As one graduate (now an instructor) complained to a letter to several of the MIT administration, such losses have been对我说过的自行车在2和4之间, only leasing against students who can't afford them.

The old headquarters, on the second floor of the Old Barracks, is a shell. The building has been abandoned for many years, and the City has been trying to find a use for it. The City has even tried to rent it to the Wellesley College women's dormitory, but no takers have been found. The City is now considering using the building for a combined Psychiatric Service. MIT's Medical Department is also looking at the building as a possible location for its expanded Psychiatric Service.

The move is being made to enlarge the Institute's facilities. The Wellesley College women's dormitory is another possible location for the expansion. The City has even considered using the building as a possible location for the Wellesley College women's dormitory, but no takers have been found. The City is now considering using the building for a combined Psychiatric Service. MIT's Medical Department is also looking at the building as a possible location for its expanded Psychiatric Service.

A series of emergency meetings involving the MIT administration and the MIT police resulted in several changes in the rules governing bicycle thefts. The police department has been asked to increase its patrols, and the Institute has agreed to provide additional security lighting in high-risk areas. The Institute has also agreed to provide additional security lighting in high-risk areas.

Bicycle thefts are a major problem in Cambridge for many years. In the past two years or so, however, Campus Patrol has noted a dramatic upsurge in the reported number of thefts on campus. This year is due to the increasing numbers of people who are using bicycles to commute to and from the Institute, but it is also due to the increased sophistication of the thieves. Organized bicycle-theft rings now get their operations up and running, local bicycle shops have seen a sharp rise in sales of high-quality locks, and the thieves have split for California with Pele Bommer and their friends.