MNC joins canvass with computer dating

By Alex Malowzcki

Moment for a New Congress has developed a surprising incentive to encourage students to work for peace candidates—a plan to match male and female students for canvass "dates."

Called "Canvass-Match," the computerized plan will pair students with similar interests for a day of stumping for one of three local peace candidates. The system was developed by the MNC, questionnaires and IBM cards were distributed Sunday to surrounding areas at such schools as Boston University, Northeastern, Simmons, and MIT.

MIT response

The response at other schools has not yet been determined, but the Canvass-Match should prove successful in attracting off students. A student at Mac-Gregor reported finding two ten resident buds filling out the IBM cards that must be returned to the Cambridge MNC headquarters.

The questionnaire is sufficiently detailed to allow most students to specify their "dream" precinct worker. They can ask for one of four hair colors, seven eye colors (including bloodshot and dilated), half a dozen height ranges, two sexes, and any age. Respondents may choose from a list of interests including social sciences, natural sciences, fine arts and literature, history, engineering, and Tibetan mythology.

Three candidates

The questionnaire also provides a choice among the three congressional candidates MNC is supporting in Eastern Massachusetts: James Dritnat (Newton, Wattham, Watertown), Michael Harrington (North Shore), and Studses (Cape Cod, New Bedford). Student canvassing will continue daily in these three areas right through to election day.

A rather appropriate symbol for the Canvass-Match adorns the upper right corner of the questionnaires: a heart superimposed on a peace symbol.

Commons plans weigh closing dining halls

Lobdell, under compulsory commons, would lose $29,100 as opposed to only $21,200 if commons were optional.

This is because Cantley projects an increased volume at both of these dining halls if commons were to become optional. At the same time, labor costs at the halls stay much the same; hence, increased profit.

A final interesting note is that contrary to rumor, McCormick is not the least profitable commons dorm due to "high overhead." In fact, the statistics show that McCormick is the most profitable, being the only dining hall on campus projected to show a profit during the next academic year.
